SANITATION IMPORTANT FOR POULTRY GROWERS

Successful poultry raising in Florida depends to a large extent upon seven factors of sanitation, declared Dr. D. A. Sanders, assistant veterinarian of the Florida Experiment Station, in a recent radio talk over WRUF.

The seven points outlined by Dr. Sanders were: clean houses, clean air (good ventilation), clean food, clean water, clean yards and ranges, clean incubators and brooders, clean birds, inside and out.

Doctor Sanders explained in detail how poultry parasites are transmitted from one bird to another, and stressed the rotation of yards and range of reducing loss from this source.

RECOGNIZE BENEFITS OF SEMINOLE
IN CREATION OF NATIONAL PARK.
PRICE OF INDIANS' BENEFACITOR

Mrs. Minnie Moore Wilton Makes Appeal For Sale of Land

By Maudie O'Donnell in Times-Union.

Mrs. Minnie Moore Wilton of Kissimmee on her way to New York paid Jacksonville a brief visit last week, and expressed herself as particularly pleased by the attitude of the Seminoles in the American Revolution, taking on the matter of a national park. She quotes them as saying that they are thoroughly in accord with and approve the idea of a national park, of 2,000,000 acres in South Florida.

"To insist that no plans for a national park be considered that do not recognize the rights of the Seminoles to abide within the ancient strongholds of their race, that do not guarantee him security from exploitation, and that do not take into account the promises made to him by our fathers."

Mrs. Wilton, a very tired, and not very well, has come to New York for a complete rest and will not come back to Florida until the fall. She is eloquent upon the subject of the Seminoles, and listening to her talk about the much abused Indians of Florida is delightful. She says:

World Preserve Record.

Ruth Bryan Owen has written to me asking for the privilege of putting into the Ethnological Bureau of the Smithsonian, the vocabulary of the Seminole language together with its rhythmic names, and their meanings, of Florida rivers, lakes and swamps, as left by the Seminoles, and their migrations over the state, as found in my book, The Seminoles of Florida.

"This vocabulary, which has reached the proportions of a dictionary, perhaps the fullest yet ever written, as a piece of research work, represents years of painstaking study, and is the work of James M. Wilton, Jr., an author in intimate contact with the old Indians both in their camps and in their homes. Such records of the human story history of this vanishing race is a treasure to the world, and is a heritage bequeathed by the Seminoles of Florida."

Dr. Bryan Owen writes: "This Florida, colorful and romantic history is one of the state's vital assets, and she is determined that this culture, as well as her other assets, shall be placed before the nation."

Minnie Moore Wilton began writing her book about the Seminoles in 1908, and published the first edition in 1928. The eighth edition has just come out in lovely new dress and is most attractive in every way.

Play Written From Book.

Mrs. Wilton tells of the play written from her book by John Steven McGroarty and produced at the Mission playhouse in San Gabriel, Cal. The play is called Oceola, an American drama.

The first production took place April 28 and the event was heralded as an artistic triumph in the Los Angeles Times, the Los Angeles Evening Herald and other papers of the state. The story of the writing of the drama is most interesting.

Mr. McGroarty conducts a weekly page in the Sunday edition of the Los Angeles Times, and is considered a literary figure of note on the Pacific coast.

The book was bought in Ocala, a friend of Mr. McGroarty and read by her several years ago. He became so interested in the character of the great Indian and so fascinated by the story of his life that he finally took Oceola as the basis of his American drama.

Mrs. Wilton calls Oceola the most widely known historical character. She tells of having received clippings from the California papers in which acknowledgment is made to her book for the character of Oceola, and she is greatly pleased that the Indian is being presented to the people of the United States as the great man she believes him to have been.

Letters from Mr. McGroarty's business manager also acknowledge the debt to Mrs. Wilton's book, though on the program there is only the acknowledgment, which is "terrible."

"Mrs. Wilton has worked for years," says a clipping from the Sunday Reporter, "to help the Seminoles and the rights of the Seminoles in the Florida Everglades, and to help the people of the Everglades to live as a nation."

The author of the Seminoles of Florida really knows the people of whom she has written. She visits them in their villages and receives them in her own charming home. They love and trust her, and her affection for them is the great reason for the great value of the Seminoles of Florida. The gentle, slender, white is a woman of great personal charm. She is a devotee of drama, and her book is very beautiful when she takes about her vision of future history for these adopted people of hers.

Has Seminoles Music.

She has made four transcriptions of the music of the Seminoles this year and has a singer, who sings world and beautiful numbers, wearing the Seminoles costume, making a most attractive program which has been presented on various occasions.

The Seminoles music is distinctive and melodious, representing the offerings of the Seminoles to the people of soul as expressed in melody.

Discussing the history of the Seminoles, Mrs. Wilton said:

"The Seminoles of Florida have lost such a distorted history that I believe the present generation to collect all the authentic history possible. Mrs. Owen and others believe that my book should be in the school libraries in Florida, so that the young people can know the truth about Florida's war chieftain and patriot and without such contradiction."

Mrs. Wilton is a club woman who has been a valuable service to the Florida Federation of Women's Clubs, working in the interest of the Seminoles, and has been an honorary life member of the National Pen Women's League.
